Liquidation and insolvency in Northern Ireland

An introduction to the formal winding up of a company's affairs, which is called liquidation. This involves the appointment of an insolvency practitioner, typically a liquidator, to manage the company's assets and liabilities. The liquidator will work towards ensuring the recovery of assets for creditors, and may also make recommendations to the court about the company's affairs.

The appointment of a liquidator can be made by the court, or by a meeting of creditors if the company is insolvent. The liquidator will have a number of duties, including the management of the company's assets and the payment of debts as far as possible.
